

CANADIAN REPORT:

03/19/09 - Taking its cue from renewed investor confidence and a belief that oil supplies are being trimmed by lower production rates, London's benchmark Brent crude and the U.S. benchmark WTI grades have reclaimed the $50 mark.

Crude oil prices have gained strongly, over $3 in overnight U.S. markets and nearly that amount in London to reach values not seen since late 2008 when crude passed the $50 mark on the descent to the $30s from its stellar $147 height in July.

The rally in crude prices is pulling refined product prices higher. U.S. gasoline futures in overnight trading are up more than 7 cents. Heating oil futures have surged more than 9 cents.

The tempo of the market is taking its lead from signs that world oil supplies are tighter because of OPEC and non-OPEC crude production cuts and dim signs that U.S. gasoline demand may be stabilizing, if not starting to rise.

Interestingly, at least for now, the market has put in its back pocket the message from yesterday that showed a 3 million barrel rise in gasoline stocks.

In the background looms the uncertainty of the global economy, but for now there seems to be a bit of a glow with U.S. stock prices seemingly on the rebound.

CASH MARKET OVERVIEW . . .

Rising wholesale costs, bought on by surging crude prices and by a conversion to lower RVP gasoline for the summer and eating into retail gasoline margins.

Spot gasoline prices in major U.S. bulk markets are expected to surge back into the $1.30s based on the overnight rise in futures prices.

The conversion to lower RVP unleaded in Chicago and the underlying rise in NYMEX numbers has pushed Chicago unleaded back to the mid-$130s, a sharp contrast to prices that were below a dollar in February and early March.

Retail prices are more than $1.25 below year-ago levels and it was a year ago that we started to see lower demand begin as prices rose to well over $3. This is important because current demand, when you start to contrast it to year ago levels, may start to look like it's stronger.
